

Today's Introit takes from Psalm 53 verses 6, 7 & 3. We review them scripturally then understand them in relation to today's feast.

Psalm 53 is paraphrased: "A prayer for help in distress." This Psalm of David recounts when Saul sought his life; the Introit contains the full scriptural verses.

6. For behold, God is my helper: and the Lord is the protector of my soul. 7. Turn back the evils upon my enemies; and cut them off in thy truth.

St. Robert Bellarmine says "behold" signifies God's sudden intervention will not be lacking in time of need; and the present tense reveals the certitude of this knowledge, as if the thing had even now been accomplished. The Saint recalls the Psalm's contextual proof of this: when Saul had so surrounded David with his army that his escape seemed impossible, a messenger suddenly brought Saul news that the Philistines had invaded his kingdom; hearing this, Saul abandoned his purpose with David. The Saint says David, in spirit, foresaw all this, and was, possibly, even then announcing, "Behold, God is my helper; and the Lord is the protector of my soul."

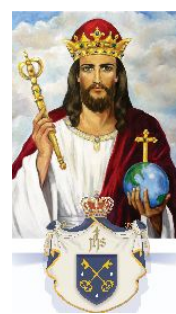

Next, "Turn back the evils upon my enemies" is a type of imprecation (common in Old Testament writ) which is to be read as a prediction. There is a contextual proof for this. For as Saul, who was pursuing David, was now pursued by the Philistines, so the "evils" which had bore upon David, were now pouring in upon Saul. Similarly, "cut them off in thy truth" was fulfilled in the utter defeat of Saul and his army upon Mount Gelboe; lastly, "in thy truth," refers to God's promise that His justice shall judge all men according to their works.

3. Save me, O God, by thy name, and deliver me in thy strength.

Here, the Psalm properly begins. In the absence of human help, David seeks help from God: "Save me, O God, by thy name," to which he adds, 'in thy strength' a saying, 'to which all things submit.' St. Robert says this verse should fortify us in our trials: for we should never despair of God's help, even though death should appear at our very door, 'for God is everywhere, has everything in his power, and never despises his clients when they have recourse to him.'

The Feast of the 9th Sunday after Pentecost, speaks of the God's care over his children, "who will not suffer you to be tempted above what you are able" and who "wept over Jerusalem" because he foresaw her future ruin due to her present transgressions. The Introit speaks to the former, "God is our helper" and He does not allow that we be tempted above our strength being "the protector of my soul"; and to the latter, "Turn back the evils upon my enemies," because punishments await those who seek to destroy the just and upon them who dismiss God's invitations to peace and preserve his temple against those who want to make of it a "den of thieves."

Save me, O God, may my enemies dig no trench about nor remove, stone by stone, the temple of my soul.

Vos autem fecistis illam speluncam latronum.

The soul and conscience of the faithful is also the Temple and House of God. Should this bring forth wicked thoughts, like harming your neighbor, they will as it were settle there like robbers in a cave, slaying one by one those that pass by, thrusting swords of their malice into those who are without fault. The faithful soul now is no longer a house of prayer, but a den of thieves, when, scorning the innocence and simplicity of holiness, it tries to do what it can to injure another. But since we are instructed without ceasing against all such perverse conduct, by the words of the Redeemer in sacred writ, even now He is doing what we read He did then: And he was teaching daily in the temple. For Truth teaches daily in the Temple when it carefully instructs the mind of the faithful: that it may guard itself against this evil. ~ St. Gregory the Great, Pope & Doctor; 604 †
